Walkout Grips Warsaw; More Strikes Called

By Roland Prinz The Associated Press

WARSAW - Streetcars and buses stopped, factory sirens blared and more than 60 plants and offices shut down Friday as Solidarity, Poland's largest independent trade union, carried out a four-hour warning strike in Warsaw to protest the government's rejection of a five-day workweek.

Solidarity has ordered its esti-mated 10 million members to stay off the job Saturday, a government-scheduled workday, as a further protest. It will be the second Saturday strike this month.

Government officials said the first Saturday strike Jan. 10 cost Poland millions of dollars in lost productivity.

In an appeal distributed to union chapters throughout Poland, independent labor leader Lech Walesa Friday called on all members to stay off their jobs Saturday. "The national coordinating commission [of Solidarity] has adopted the stand that Saturday,

The strikes coincided with a Soviet newspaper report of joint "field training" between Soviet and Polish troops. No date was given for the exercise, which appeared aimed at putting pres-

The strikes are the latest in a series aimed at forcing the government to comply with terms of the Aug. 31 Gdansk agreement, which ended last summer's nationwide labor rebellion and authorized the Soviet bloc's first labor organizations independent of Communist Party control.

MOSCOW - On Jan. 13, Tass carried an article reporting that the Soviet fleets in the Far East had abandoned whaling.

In a dispatch from Vladivostok, a port that is closed to foreigners, the agency said that three fishing fleets, listed as the Soviet Russia, the Vladivostok and the Dalny and other marine uses. For several years now, the Soviet Union and Japan have been the world's two major commercial whaling nations, and therefore the two main targets of the conservation organizations that are campaigning for the outlawing of all whaling operations. The Tass report seemed important, despite its brevity, for two reasons: The Soviet Union is the busiest hunter of whales in the world, accounting last year for one-third of the world catch by weight, and the report described an increasing Soviet interest in conservation ac-

"The end of whaling," said Tass, "is one of the points of an extensive program for the protection of nature on the continent and in the coastal waters of the Pacific. The first-ever Soviet maritime reservation operates in Peter I Bay, and all breeding grounds of seabinds and animals have been put under protection."

But on Thursday, Vsevolod Sapronov, a whaling expert in the ministry responsible for fisheries. said flatly that the Tass report did not mean the Soviet Union was abandoning whaling operations all over the world.

It appears that the more modern fleets of ships based in Baltic and Black Sea ports will continue to operate in the Southern Hemisphere, mainly the Antarctic Ocean. The Soviet Union succeeded in winning a 1980-81 quota of 3,120 Antarctic minke whales at the 1980 meeting of the Interna-Brighton, England, and in subsequent negotiations with the Japa-

The change in policy, Mr. Sapronov explained, was a result of the commission's decision in 1979 to ban the operation of factory ships in the northern Pacific. Other sources said that the ban made the operation of the Vladivostok fleets, designed to handle sperm whales, wholly uneconomic.

No Reversal Seen

Nor did the spokesman offer much hope to those who took the Tass announcement as a signal that the Soviet Union was about to reverse its position of 30 years and back a worldwide ban. A reversal of this sort might well have made it possible to impose such a ban at this year's meeting of the commis-

"The Soviet Union," Mr. Sapronov said, "treats this problem from a scientific point of view. WASHINGTON - About 62 million Americans live in areas where carbon monoxide pollution. most of it from automobiles and trucks, is above federal limits, a government study says.

By 1987, the number will climb to 74.6 million despite pollution controls that already cost about $20 billion a year, the study added. The draft of the report prepared by the National Commission on Air Quality is scheduled for release next Monday, but parts of it have heen made available. The report said that in four major urban areas - Boston, Houston, Los Angeles and New York the problem appears to be intractable and no reasonable effort is likely to bring the cities into compliance with the standards.

But on Sept. 17 he was sentenced to death. An appeal to Gen.

Chun was his last chance to escape hanging after the Supreme Court upheld the sentence. Until recently, most observers said they thought Mr. Kim would be executed, primarily because South Korean military officers favored it. Lt. Gen, Roh Tae Woo, head of military intelligence, reortedly told visitors last month The army would lose confidence in President Chun if he showed mercy to Kim."

Analysts had said that, if Gen. Chun commuted Mr. Kim's death sentence, it would be the result of several factors. One is South Korea's serious economic situation, which would be severely aggravated if Japan and other nations made good on their threats to cut off aid and investment to South Korea if Mr. Kim were hanged.

West Berlin Legislature Elects Vogel Mayor

BERLIN — The West Berlin House of Representatives resolved its immediate city government crisis Friday, electing former federal Justice Minister Hans-Jochen Vogel as governing mayor along with a 13-member Senate of ministers.

The city government, under Mayor Dietrich Stobbe, collapsed last Thursday night following West Berlin's higgest postwar financial scan-dal. Both the ruling Social Democratic Party and the liberal Free Democratic Party have said they are ready for early elections in the city, not officially due until 1983. A date has yet to be agreed upon.

..NATO Head Urges New Strategy

The Associated Press
MIAMI — Calling the Soviet Union a four-headed menace, the Supreme Allied Commander Europe says that NATO countries need a new defense strategy to remain secure.

"Detente has different meanings in different countries," Gen. Bernard Rogers said in an address to the Greater Miami Chamber of Commerce Thursday. Despite her declarations of peaceful intent the Soviet Union will invade a sovereign nation when it suits her and when the risks appear acceptable." Gen. Rogers said that the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan spelled out the need for a new global strategy by NATO nations and that the United States needed to set an example of increased military spending.

He said that, if the United States does not set a pattern, "it won't be done in West Germany. If if isn't done in West Germany, Great Britian won't do it," and neither will France, Italy and the other NATO countries. Gen. Rogers, 59, who succeeded

Secretary of State Alexander Haig Ir. in the NATO post in mid-1979, defined the Soviet menace as: its willingness to spend money on its military; increasing internal pressures as the Soviet Union faces agriculture problems, poor relations with China and oil shortages; its naval capability and a widening gap in the balance between NATO and Warsaw Pact nations.

hearing it," Foreign Minister Kjeld

Now politicians and members of the armed forces are saying that the position of no increase in military spending was basically a dis-cussion point and that the situa-tion in Poland had strengthened the arguments for more military outlays. Gen. G.K. Kristensen, chief of the defense staff, said: "I feel we'll have an increased budget. We are extremely optimistic, and there's the possibility of getting about 3 percent in one of the budget years."

General Reprimanded

Gen. Kristensen was reprimanded by Defense Minister Poul Sogaard last summer after he said in effect that the U.S. secretary of defense, Harold Brown, was correct in criticizing the Danish govern-ment's attitude toward military spending. Mr. Brown said in let-ters leaked to the Danish press that U.S. security guarantees would be difficult to apply to countries not showing much concern about protecting themselves.

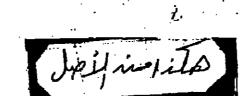

"I think that Mr. Brown's position influenced our politicians," Gen. Kristensen said. "It stimulated them, and our optimism now is based on the hard thinking it created." At the same time said that for Denmark to military goals the budget achieve 5-percent real gro nually, and he acknowled the goals established in a 1 zation program in 1973 been fully realized.

Cost Directives

The cost-cutting directives issued Thursday would yield $300 million in savings, a large part of which would come from the travel curbs, the White House press office said. More importantly, part of these directives would "close down the pipeline" to future expenses, a Budget Bureau spokesman said. Aides said the order against

NEW YORK - The West German ambassador to Iran, a close associate of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and former Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher all were instrumental in breaking a major roadblock to negotiations for release of the hostages, ABC

Events leading to release of the hostages, including details on the West German involvement, were included in a two-part ABC News special broadcast Thursday.

'Basically Accurate' Former President Carter said Friday that the ABC documentary on private hostage negotiations was basically accurate.

However, ABC's report that the United States had condoned the arrest of the late shah in Panama was called erroneous by Mr. Carter. Andreas Lowenfeld, an international law professor at New York University, and other legal experts agreed that Mr. Carter's agreement with Iran was binding on President Reagan under international law. Most of them discounted suggestions that the agreement might be invalid because of duress and extortion by Iran.

Renege on the Deal?

A round of appeals has been made to President Reagan to renounce the deal Jimmy Carter's government made to get the hostages released. The objectors do have something of a point. It has been a dirtying experience to deal with kidnappers and torturers in Tehran as though they were gentlemen in the international club. There does not seem to be a penny of "ransom," as conventionally defined, in the agreement, but undeniably it is distasteful to deal in money, even Iran's own money, to retrieve people illegally captured. It is quite true, moreover, that the United States can accept no moral obligation to kidnappers: If the United States chose to default on the agreement, it would not have to defend itself on that score.

We feel, nonetheless, that the event is more complicated than that. If the United States has no moral obligation to kidnappers, it certainly has a moral obligation to their victims, including, in this context, to the victims of acts of terrorism to come. The hostages back from Tehran would not be hurt by renunciation of the agreement that brought them home, though U.S. financial claimants might be. But future hostages could well be hurt by renunciation, which could chill the willingness of would-be compromisers and middlemen to bet on the American word in the next crisis. For that matter, a great many people in a great many other situations depend on the American word. It is not a mere Boy Scout thing. A great power cannot trifle with it unless the burden lifted, or the benefit expected, is very great.

In this instance, the Reagan administration has been taking into account an essential political dimension in its cautious initial moves to honor "the obligations of the United States." To renounce the deal would be to treat Algeria shabbily for its considerable pains and to pitch into further disarray a region in which virtually every country except perhaps Iran hopes the United States will move back into a steadying role. Are these really acceptable costs?

Meanwhile, the specific terms of the deal are surely worth looking at. The United States has the hostages. And of $12 billion in Iranian assets seized, the United States currently still holds $9 billion: $5 billion disbursed or held in escrow to pay off U.S. banks and $4 billion-plus that won'tbe unblocked until satisfactory procedures are established to settle the claims of U.S. compa-

It is often forgotten that, before the hos-tage crisis. U.S. firms were having big trouble getting their money from the Iranian revolutionary regime. It was, for instance, threatening to default on "shah loans." The new agreement pays out the U.S. banks at 100 cents on the dollar, that's already done. The companies are assured an international claims procedure underwritten by a "miracu-lous pitcher" fund in which the Iranians must keep at least $5 billion at all times.

The drafters of the financial terms point out that Iran's is not the first revolution in which U.S. businessmen have encountered turbulence. To cite one typical case, only when relations were normalized in 1978 was a claims agreement made with China; claimants got 42 cents on the dollar.

In Cuba, meanwhile, Americans have claimed $1.5 billion for two decades and got nothing. We reserve final judgment. One thing we are waiting to see, however, is whether the companies' mood to litigate will be affected by their own closer study of the terms. It would also be interesting to get their judgment on the official assertion that they. are better off now than they were before the hostages were seized.

Which Yardstick for Manila?

The lifting of martial law in the Philippines can be welcomed for what it is: a symbolic offering to President Reagan and Pope John Paul II. Symbols matter, and President Ferdinand Marcos could do worse than end eight years of martial law and at the same time release 341 prisoners, half of them charged with political crimes. But he retains all his emergency powers; he can restore martial law at any time. That is the hard substance beneath the welcome symbol.

Mr. Marcos is beginning his 15th year as president, his 9th as sole ruler of some 47 million people. It has been an uneasy reign, marred by plausible charges of corruption and mismanagement; he has been challenged by secessionist Moslems and by an increasingly desperate democratic opposition. Hence the eagerness to receive legitimizing approval abroad — especially from Rome and Washington

The Catholic hierarchy in Manila has been outspokenly critical, despite an offer by Mr. Marcos to build a lavish basilica. Cardinal Jaime Sin recently appealed to him to honor his piedges to end "the climate of fear" promoted by martial law. The cardinal did not have to remind him that John Paul II is visiting the Philippines next month.

The secular eye of Mr. Marcos has been on his country's traditional ally, the United States. It has been a fixed article of Filipino belief that Jimmy Carter was a misguided crusader who gave inordinate weight to human rights. In truth, bowing to what it saw as strategic imperatives, the Carter administration gave Manila $500 million in military aid in return for "unhapmered use" of two U.S. bases. In dealing with Mr. Marcos, the Carter liberals wrestled with their principles, and pragmatism usually won.

With a team of professed realists taking control in Washington, President Marcos is eager for a fresh start. And it may be that a conservative U.S. government can speak with greater persuasive effect about human rights. quietly and privately, to his kind of regime.

There is nothing intrinsically "liberal" about the values that Washington has been promoting: respect for a written constitution, an end to police abuses and full independence for the judiciary. If Communist counries are to be condemned for flouting these values, it would be inconsistent to use a different yardstick in dealing with "free" allies.

According to Jeane Kirkpatrick, Mr. Regan's delegate to the United Nations, doublestandard thinking was the abiding sin of the Carterites. In the Philippines, there is a chance for the Reaganites to demonstrate single-standard rigor. Let them welcome the propitious steps taken by Mr. Marcos - and press for more of the same.

On Losing the Namibia Game

What has been called the oldest established permanent floating negotiation at the United Nations has sunk in Lake Geneva. Whether the Namibia peace talks resurface will depend on the still private (and perhaps unjelled) attitudes of the Reagan administration, as well as those of the South African government that brought about the Geneva conference — and then decided its initiative was "premature"

Nearly three years ago, South Africa agreed in principle to a UN settlement plan that called for an electoral solution to the interminable conflict in the vast territory formally known as South-West Africa. The plan was backed by five Western powers, including the United States. Its terms were acceptable to the insurgent South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO). Having agreed in principle, however, the Pretoria regime could not, finally, bring itself to accept the probability that SWAPO would win a UNmonitored vote.

South Africa's stalling seemed to end last October. For the first time, it agreed to fix a general timetable for a cease-fire and elections. A conference was arranged at which old adversaries would finally meet. But South Africa has balked again, saying the UN could not be impartial in an election even if voting were administered, as agreed, by an multiracial government sponsored by Pretoria. This turnabout is due in part to the Reagan triumph. The Namibia peace plan was a Carter administration initiative, and Pretoria may calculate that Washington will now join in opposing a settlement that might bring professed Marxists to power.

But South Africans insist that the U.S. election was a secondary consideration, that their domestic politics are primary. The ruling Nationalist Party seems paralyzed by indecision. One wing, more moderate, figures that SWAPO poses less of a threat to South African security than continued confrontation and possible economic sanctions. Hardliners argue the reverse. South Africa itself faces what could be bitter elections this year.

Whenever in doubt, the Nationalist Party has reflexively turned to the seeming security of the laager, Afrikaans for a barricaded camp. But fortress security is surely illusory in Africa.

And any Washington administration, in balancing its own interests in Africa, is more likely to conclude that SWAPO is less of a threat to Western interests than close association with an apartheid regime in Pretoria. No U.S. diplomacy can ignore the worldwide condemnation of continued South African rule in Namibia.

Questions on 'Student' Jailers

In nearly 15 months, we never did find out just who they were and whose orders they were taking, when and where they were trained, by whom and to what end, whether for an Islamic or Marxist revolution or both. If nothing else, though, we can at least put them in their proper international context.

The whole of Iran's revolutionary underground - including both Islamic and Marxist wings - has been locked into the network for more than a decade.

The Iranians have been a privileged elite in this network since it first took shape, under radical Palestinian anspices. They were among the earliest foreign recruits in Middle East guerrilla camps: all such camps, in Syria, Lebanon, Southern Yemen, Libya, Algeria, but especially those run by George Habash's Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine. Soon after Ayatollah Khomeini swept into power in January, 1979, the PFLP's chief spokesman, Bassam Abu Sharif, spoke proudly of his group's having "been in touch with the Iranian people's struggle for the past seven years," provid-ing them with training "in every-thing from propagands to the use of weapons." On the very day he spoke, the Journal de Geneve re-ported the recent arrival, in Iran and elsewhere around the Gulf, of yet another terrorist band freshly graduated from a PFLP camp in Beaufort Castle near Tyre, Leba-non. The band had just spent eight months in the camp, trained by Cuban instructors there, "in street and desert lighting, attacking people and buildings, regular demoli-tion operations and sabotaging oil

From their own Paris headquarters, they worked closely with the Turkish People's Liberation Army (whose office they shared until the French police raided it), the IRA Provisionals, the Spanish Basque terrorists in ETA, the Japanese Red Army European team, the Swiss anarchists running a weap-ons takeout service for terrorist bands of all Western Europe, the West German Baader Meinhof Gang — helping them to plot the shah's attempted assassination in

Message to Reagan: Choices in Angola

By Anthony Lewis

UANDA, Angola — Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week that he opposed U.S. recognition of the Angolan government so long as there are 20 mercenaries within their borders." The day he said that the French foreign minister, Jean Francois-Poncet, ended a four-day official visit to Angola with a joint statement pledging de-velopment of the two countries economic and political relations.

The United States and its European allies have taken opposite courses on Angola since the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, known by its initials MPLA, won power here in 1975 and held it with Cuban help. Washington has said "no" to diplomatic relations. Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and others have embassies here and are working to expand their activities — as the French example shows.

French Trade

France's trade with Angola is now about $250 million a year and growing fast. French oil companies won two exploration concessions last year. There is a Renault assembly plant. A French company built and is helping to manage a huge textile plant in Catumbela.

near Lobito. Economic dealings with Angola are not, as in the case of some developing countries, a matter of aid or rolling loans. Angola pays for what it buys. Its oil revenues give it a small balance of payments sur-plus even after very large purchases abroad.

Gen. Haig wisely avoided a rigid position on Angola in his Senate testimony. He indicated that any undertaking for Cuban troops to start leaving might create "an en-tirely different situation." And he said there were a number of factors to consider, among them "the degree of opportunity afforded to Western enterprise" by Angola's

Marxist government.

As to that, the briefest visit to Luanda by a representative of the new U.S. administration would be an eye-opener. The place is crawling with Western businessmen. and their products are in evidence. New Volvo buses wind through the city, and the Swedes are here training mechanics. The Austrians are looking for iron ore. DeBeers mines diamonds. Com is bought from France, rice from Thailand. Japanese trucks are on the way.

Not in Comecon

Angola has virtually no trade, in oil or anything else, with the East-ern bloc. The MPLA government has reportedly refused to join Comecon, the trade group of the Soviet Union and its satellites, despite its dependence on Soviet weapons and Soviet, East German and Cuban military advisers.

Most remarkable of all, on the economic side, is the fact that U.S.

businessmen are here despite chill from Washington. And a are obviously welcome.

Third World Instability

By Jonathan Power

ONDON - There is a tide of Lopinion now on a dangerous upswing. It is the view that "victorious violent insurgency headed by Marxist revolutionaries" is sweep-ing through the Third World. Perhaps most of the chief Reagan foreign policy advisers share it to some degree.

For sure, political instability is rife in the economically deprived. Third World, But to jump from that observation to the conclusion that Marxist subversion is the primary cause and Soviet begemony a beneficiary of such turbulence is a leap of mind-boggling proportions.

No better recent answer to the argument can be provided than by a look at Turkey. The military coup d'etat in Turkey last September certainly has put an end to the growing anarchy and disregard for authority that was all-pervasive. But what has been largely overlooked is the root of this political discord. It was primarily a sharp decline of economic activity dictat-ed by Turkey's balance of payments. This far overshadowed other causes, such as right-wing re-ligious fanaticism or militant leftwing Marxist activity.

Rescue Operation

Although it was West Germany which had led a financial rescue operation earlier in the year, it was, ironically, the relationship with West Germany which had probably done more to undermine Turkey's economic stability than any other single factor.

Over the last 15 years, West

Germany attracted millions of Turks to work as Gastarbeiter in its factories and service industries. For a time migrant remittances covered the cost of nearly half of Turkey's imports, lulling Turkey's economic planners into the belief that they could afford to gatecrash industrial society by import-ing all that was needed for rapid

But when the economic recession hit Europe, West Germany, with no loyalty to the immigrant workforce that had greased the wheels of its own successful economic engine, sent hundreds of thousands of Turks packing. Not only were the returning Gastarbeiter no longer able to contribute to bridging the balance-of-payments gap, they had lost their attachment to their old homes and livelihood in the rural villages, and became part of the swelling Lumpenproletariat of the larger towns. The Turkish crisis was most unlikely to have reached the degree of severity it did if either West Germany had done as Britain has and given its immigrants political and residential status in the country in which they worked or if Turkey over the years had used its remittances to revitalize the rural areas so that the hemorrhage brought about by losing its best and brightest to jobs abroad was significantly slowed. If the military government and its Western supporters do not come to terms with these two factors, no amount of firm government or economic and military aid will remedy the situation. Africa, since Cuban soldiers entered Angola in 1975, has, along with the Gulf area, replaced Southeast Asia as the prime area of superpower competition. It is difficult, however, to understand quite why the West takes the Soviet Union so seriously in Africa

The two major Communist toe holds today are Angola and Ethiopia. In Angola, the Cubans would probably be sent home to-morrow if the West would use its muscle to persuade South Africa to begin the implementation of the UN plan for Namibian elections and independence.

In Ethiopia, where the Soviet and Cuban troops are bogged down in dead-end causes like the Eritrean war and fighting off Somali nationalists, it is doubtful if any Soviet general on the spot would recommend anoth of those proportions.

Of course, the materia' even Cuban soldiers, dispatched to a conflict a the occasion offers, but 2 and Mozambique have sakes more than that to African countries to bre links with the West. They economic expertise and which, by and large, can obtained in the West.

Labor has swung leftward since it lost the general election in May, 1979, and Saturday's conference is expected to choose a new method of electing the leader which would favor left-wing candidates.

If that happens, up to 12 of the 267 Labor members of Parliament could eventually abandon the party. Angola Seeks Diplomatic Way To Get Namibia Independence

By Anthony Lewis New York Times Service

LUANDA. Angola - Angolan leaders say that they want to keep working with Western countries to find a diplomatic way to achieve independence for South-West Africa (Namibia). If the problem is solved, they say. Cuban troops can start to leave Angola.

These two points were made by officials of the government and the Marxist ruling party, the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.

The Popular Movement, aided by the Cubans, won control in the civil war that broke out after the Portuguese left their former colony in 1975, and the Cubans later helped the government keep a South African invasion at bay. About 17,000 Cuban soldiers are

Western Powers' Aid

Lucio Lara, the Popular Movement's secretary, is regarded as its leading theoretician and the most powerful figure in Angola after President Jose Eduardo dos Santos. He was asked in an interview what the next step should be on South-West Africa.

"I feel we must press on with the diplomatic way," Mr. Lara said. He emphasized the role of the five Western powers that have been trying to work out a solution with South Africa: the United States, Britain, France, West Germany

Mr. Lara said that he was worried about the new U.S. administration and assumed that South Africa had refused to come to an agreement at the recent conference on South-West Africa in Geneva because it wanted to "wait for President Reagan."

The Reagan administration will have to be given time to make its policy, Mr. Lara said. But in any event, he added. "West Germany, France, Canada, even Mrs. [Margaret] Thatcher [of Britain], are all

South Africa has administered South-West Africa for 60 years. It has agreed in principle to independence for the territory, but wants to hand it over to internal parties that it has fostered rather than to the guerrilla movement, the South-West Africa People's Organization.

A plan drawn up by the five Western powers under UN auspices calls for a cease-fire, the entry of a UN force and elections. South Africa had seemed to agree, but at Geneva refused to set a date for the plan to begin.

Angola, which borders on South-West Africa, supports the guerrillas, and South Africa has carried out frequent and punishing raids into Angola. The South African threat was mentioned by Mr. Lara and others when the question of the Cubans was raised. The United States has refused to recognize the govern-ment in Angola because of the Cuban presence. Mr. Lara said that he understood that, but he continued: "The problem of the Cubans is the problem of South Africa, We are not yet in a position to be on

"Naturally, if we have an independent Namibia, if the South African situation is peaceful and as we develop our own forces we will not need the Cubans forever."

When Threat Disappears

Foreign Minister Paulo Jorge was more explicit. Asked whether the Cubans would leave if the issue of South-West Africa were settled. he said: "Of course. We have said this very clearly to the Americans. When the threat from South Africa disappears — and we believe it will with the independence of Namibia - then we won't need the Cuban presence here."

Mr. Jorge spoke with some optimism about the possibility that South Africa would in time accept the Western-UN plan on South-West Africa. And he pointedly did not say that it was time to seek UN sanctions against South Afri-South Africa at Geneva," the for-eign minister said. Ruffles Flourish In Rome Parade

by Hebe Dorsey

OME — The lady is definitely not a tramp at Valentino's. She is Pretty Baby' actress Brooke Shields, 15, who recently raised a furor in the United States with those risque Calvin Klein ieans ads on television.

There was no danger of any such thing hap-pening at Valentino's. The smooth Latin lover of the fashion world had Shields model five dresses out of his summer country collection. Her first time on the runway? "No, her second," said Shields' mother, wiping away a tear after the collection was shown. "The first time, she was 3." Also in attendance were Shields' aunt, and her stepsister Diana, 17.

Shields, the granddaughter of Princess Marina Torlonia, was brought over by Italian Harper's Bazaar to be photographed in the Italian conture collection that ended Thursday night with Valentino's show. The designer had done a careful job selecting the dresses that Shields was to model for him. "She is a mixture of sex and youth," he said. "Of course, I was aware of her age. I didn't have her wear dresses slit up to here. But neither did I put her into debutante gowns. That would have been too obvious."

Instead, Shields were ruffles upon ruffles.

And she broke the house with her opening number - a girlish, pink linen dress with short puffy sleeves, a picture of essential innocence and a far cry from Klein's sexy jeans.

The young actress was nervous — "I hope I don't fall," she kept saying before the show — and she had a "Do I dare?" look as she first stepped on the runway. But she soon relaxed, giggled and did a funny, slightly spoofy job, giving the andience a beguiling, dimpled smile and kicking her heels as she left.

Besides the excitement on the runway Valentino had spiced up the front row with personalities including Francoise Sagan, who flew in from Paris, and Paloma Picasso, fresh from New York. They got their money's worth. The only international designer in Rome, Valentino had a hit of a collection that was a glorious summary of his grand fashion approach — super clothes for superstars, luxury for luxury's sake, and damn the expense. Whereas most designers today are reaching for the jogging suit look, Valentino still believes that glamour pays. It does indeed, judging from his last season, when he sold $2 million

Ruffles were the big story at Valentino's, a trend that he started last season. It proved to be such an influence in the United States that. he has decided to do his own copying. He made a recent tie-up with Jacques Mulqueen, an American entrepreneur with an operation in Korea. Mulqueen will soon put on the market a new line of so-called "Valentino Studio" blouses retailing at $90. (In comparison, a Valentino boutique blouse costs. $350 and a courture one $2,500.)

worth of conture dresses.

Valentino is excited by this extension of his carriage trade. "I was a bit tired of being judged a dream," he said. "I'll be glad to see a lot more women wearing my clothes."

Despite such forays in cheaper directions.

Valentino's $300,000 collection Thursday night was still miles away from the masses. From finely pleated silk Bermuda shorts to ruffled and lacy dresses that flipped like the pages of a book, Valentino's collection was solid livered.

His favorite colors were black and navy, heavily accented with impeccable starched white collars. The evening grew more colorful with a new print that looked like red marble. He used his new lace — thick and heavy, like an old-fashioned tablecloth - for see-through sleeves and see-through backs, the latter being another of his innovations.

His daytime look was young and brisk, with swirting skirts tied over Bermuda shorts and short cropped jackets, many of which looked like fencing jackets, complete with double rows of contrasting buttons. Others fastened with a soft drape on the shoulder. As always, Valentino used a lot of crisp linen, including a new one that looked like a light tweed.

The models wore low-heeled, lace-decorated shoes and big boater hats with trailing ribbons that added to the youthful look of the collection. The evening look, on the other hand, was totally adult, with an impressive collection of grand entrance dresses. Besides the ruffled ones, the best of which was a red creation that looked like the Winged Victory, Valentino brought out stiff court gowns with elaborate lacework and shimmering jeweled sleeves.

Valentino is into everything these days. He is discussing a new version of "Camille" with film director Franco Zeffirelli, and he has just finished the costumes for a Balanchine ballet that opened at the Lincoln Center in New York. Valentino is mad about ballet. His dream would be to form his own ballet company, according to his business partner, Giancar-lo Giammetri. "But that is too expensive even for Valentino," Giammetti added.

Valentino has also designed a boiserie-lined bathroom for Pienmi, in connection with which the bathroom company spent $800,000 in newspaper ads alone. With five houses, including one each in Gstaad and Venice, and a boat, Valentino also lives like a king, No wonder he looks like he's sitting on top of the

The other Roman conture houses offered showcases for the Italian fabric manufacturers which explains why so many of them manage to survive.

Some are cleverer than others. Andre Lang, for instance, does not make headlines, but he makes money. Few designers have such an accurate idea of their clientele and fewer still are ready to travel as far and as fast to track it down. But it pays. Lang spends four months out of the year on the road, mostly in America, and said he has sold $1 million worth of dresses in five weeks. His favorite targets are Chica-go, Houston, Dallas and Palm Beach, where the country club luncheons and charity balls go nonstop. Where other designers try to go democratic, Laug, who thinks nothing of charging $4,000 for custom-made slacks and $2,500 for a simple skirt, takes the opposite route and clearly understands the money

One most also mention the peerless Roberto Capucci, who is virtually the only designer ex-perimenting nowadays, with dramatic results. His collection was an aesthetic wonder, with fabric going in unusual and felicitous direc-tions. His butterfly dresses were spectacular. This collection is a must for all students of fashion, as he is a poet and not a prince-mer-

West German Cinema: A Wave for the 1980s

by Ronald Holloway

ERLIN - Last April, on the eve of the Academy Awards, when Volker Schloendorif's adaptation of Gunter Grass' "The Tim Drum" appeared to be a shoo-in for the Oscar for best foreign film, Vincent Canby of The New York Times braved the waters of film criticism to predict that "we are at last entering the decade of Ger-

His essay cited not only the hottest box-olfice draw of the year at art houses ("The Tin Drum" won, in fact, the first foreign film Oscar for a German film), but also noted the spreading craze for directors Rainer Werner Fassbinder, Werner Herzog and Wim Wenders at a time when French and Italian cinema appeared to be on the decline.

Canby's euphoric prediction was not shared by other influential American critics — John Simen, Jay Cocks and Gary Arnold, to name but a few — whose reviews can, all too often. make or break a film. And now, close to a year later, what has been the fate of West German cinema on the precarious American market? Will the 1980s indeed be "the decade of German cinema?" Can West German films hold their own against the long-established popularity of French and Italian cinema?

A review of the box-office figures shows that West German cinema has achieved, for the first time since the war, a breakthrough on the American market. The "magic circle" on Variety's chart of top-grossing films — a box office gross of $1 million — was reached, in quick succession, by Fassbinder's "The Marriage of Maria Braum" (which finished at $1.5 million) and Schloendorff's "The Tin Drum" (which entered the second "magic circle" to set a mark of $2.2 million).

"Maria Braun," moreover, ran at the Cinema Studio, across from the home of the New York Film Festival at Lincoln Center (where Fassbinder is a perennial favorite), for a full year. And the "The Tin Drum" now ranks ifth among record-makers on the lingo circuit —behind "La Cage aux Folles" ($6.6 million), "Cousin Cousine", ($5.5 million), "Bread and Chocolate" ($3 million) and "Madame Rosa"
($2.5 million), the French and Italian leaders.

There is little doubt that West German directors such as Schloendorff, Fassbinder, Herzog and Wenders command attention and respect at some 200 art houses catering to foreign films across the United States. Further, the media centers and campus conemas warmly embraced Hans-Juergen Syberberg's "Hitler" Klaus Kirschner's "Mozart," although the former was a seven-hour marathon and the latter lasted four hours. Both "special events"

proved that Kunst und Kommerz are amiable

Such successes in 1980 pointed to two alternatives in the trade: the international route with English-language casting; or independence as a producer-director in West Germany with: a distributing base for "German stories" abroad (such as Luis Bunuel enjoys in Paris). At the moment it appears that Fassbinder and Standard are sendented by the international Wenders are enchanted by the international tag on their wares, while Schloendorff and Syberberg have apparently opted for German films on the art-house circuit. Herzog is keeping a foot in each camp.

Fassbinder's first project after "Maria Braun" achieved its U.S. breakthrough was the 15-hour television series, "Berlin Alexander-platz," based on Alfred Doeblin's 1929 novel. It was shown in its entirety at the Venice Film Festival last autumn. Then he made "Lili Marleen," starring Hanna Schygulla, which ap-pears to be a kind of sequel to "Maria Braun" in stylistic tone, historical milieu and public relations angle - save that it has been duly commercialized for the international market. How foreign audiences audiences — particularly American ones - will react to Schygulla and other European actors speaking English on the screen is an open question. In any case, that version was dubbed into German for the premiere in Berlin. The decision whether to enter "Lili Marleen" into competition at Cannes will depend on the public's reaction.

"Lili Marleen" the song, written first as a poem by a lovesick soldier on the front in 1917, was set to music in 1938 by film composer Norbert Schultze. A recording made by singer Lale Andersen in 1939 was not success ful until it was broadcast from Belgrade in 1941 for soldiers on the front — and then Goebbels tried to shelve the nostalgic lyrics when he realized that it was a favorite on both sides of the lines during cease-fire interludes. Fassbinder's film is loosely based on the career-in-shadows of Lale Andersen, but the game of manipulating history could backfire in the long run, simply because the song has a nostalgic aura and the story requires a hand, in scripting and directing, for the tragic, ironic twists in history. Also, a "Maria Marleen," so to speak, is like asking lightning to strike twice in the same place. In the long run, it is the U.S. art-house market that will decide the lingo issue and the German public that will give the ultimate vote of confidence. Fassbinder's feverish bid for international fame as a director is linked with his earlier attempt to make a big-budget, English-lan-guage film: "Despair" (1977) had a lukewarm reception at Cannes despite its being based on Vladimir Nabokov, scripted by Tom Stoppard and top-lined with Dirk Bogarde. colonnaded fountain and a well-preserved stoa where one can imagine the Carians, seafarers and mercenaries, meeting to exchange news from ahroad.

Further down the coast above the port of Fethiye, the Lycian Telmessus, are more rock tombs looking out across a beautiful bay. It is pleasant to stay in the yacht harbor while making arrangements to visit nearby Xanthus, and the food at the Lykka Hotel is particularly good. The jolting road to Xanthus used to discourage visitors but it has been rebuilt and is now one of the best in Turkey. The drive climbs through pine forests that shelter hundreds of blue bechives, then plunges to plains planted in cotton, fruit and tobacco.

The site of Xanthus, which was the Lycians' capital, covers two hillsides covered with tumbled boulders, olive and cypress. The Lycians, known in the castern Mediterranean as far back as 1400 B.C., were fierce warriors who reckoned their lineage matrilineally and gave women an honored place in their constitution. From behind the massive walls of Xanthus, a segment of which still exists, the Lycians, having slaughtered their families, surged in suicidal defeat against Persian invaders in 567 B.C. The city prospered again in Hellenistic and Roman times and there are monuments of every period scattered over the hillsides. The famed Harpy Tomb perches atop a tall pillar, a distinctive Lycian silhouette above the Roman theater. (The tomb reliefs were taken to the British Museum in the 19th century).

Just beyond Xanthus a rough side road leads to the sea and what was once the port of Patara. The cult of Apollo probably came from Lycia to mainland Greece, and the god had his first oracle here. St. Paul sailed for Phoenicia from Patara's busy quays. The site is unexcavated and there is a challenge in spotting what remains amidst the pine and marsh above the beach. Great dunes swirl back from the sea to spill their sand down the tiers of the theater where Patara's citizens once were Turkey has had fewer visitors of late, and those who do come are assured of a warm welcome. Travel is economical and there are comfortable bus connections from Izmir south to Marmaris. It is possible to hire a car in Izmir and leave it beyond Marmaris at the resort city of Antalya, which has scheduled air service.

'More Is Never Enough' for Miss Piggy

by Jennifer Seder

OLLYWOOD — Wearing sunclasses, Bo Derek pigtails, a fringed and beaded chamois tunic and sowboy boots, super-Muppet Miss Piggy breezed into Hollywood for two days recently, dragging a giant steamer trunk and her French poodle, Fron Frou.

"C'est moi," she squealed, lashes fluttering over her violently violet eyes. "Call it a mira-cle, call it hard work, call it a fabulous body and fashion sense that just won't quit...or should I just call you a taxi?"

The world's favorite cochonne fatale arrived from Muppet headquarters in New York to model four of her latest, custom-made LA. outfits: a punk-pig minidress a la Betty Boop; a Rodeo Drive shopping suit; a wet suit with flippers for midnight dips in the hot tub, and the Western outfit in which she arrived. In keeping with tradition, the shapely, purseeared Pigmalion never removed her pearls or her elbow-length lavender satin gloves. Not even when she modeled the wet suit.

"I always try to go all out when I dress," she said, referring to her celebrated hog-wild taste, as she disappeared into the studio of Holly wood celebrity photographer Harry Langdon.

More is never enough. That's my motio. There should always be some element of trop and glitz in one's wardrobe. But the secret of my allure is not my fashion sense. It's my eyes. Whatsisname once said: The eyes are the mirrors of one's soul.' This is especially true of Miss Piggy paused as a makeup artist powdred her snout. "You know, in life, mot has found one needo"t be a pig to be beautiful. But it does help to be beautiful if you are a pig."

She added that it also helps to have an amphibian to look up to, alluding to her widely publicized romance with Kermit the Frog.

"I dress for my frog moi — and the world."
Asked if Kermit is still top man on the tadpole, she snapped, "Kermie's nothing special. We're just good friends."

One of the most popular television and screen stars in the world ("The Muppet Show" is aired in more than a hundred countries, the golden-tressed Miss Piggy is truly a legend in her own time. With her gog-eyed gaze and suc-calent proportions, she has come to personify the puppet revolution in popular entertain-ment. And not since Edith Piaf (one of Miss Piggy's idols) has a star created such a sensa-"When opportunity knocks," she advised in her Time magazine Pig of the Year cover story, "you don't just let him in — you put on some soft music, get out the Taittinger '66 and pin him to the couch."

But being a superpig isn't all swine and roses. "It isn't easy being the most fabulous, successful and admired pig in the world," she said. "The posh poolside parties, the limousines, the adoring, fanatic crowds, the limousines, the adoring, the decimant of the legislation of the said. best tables at restaurants, the designer clothes - the pig penthouse on Pork Avenue - sometimes it's just a chore to keep going."

Miss Piggy is finishing up her starring role "The Great Muppet Caper" (her second Muppet film), and will soon have her first book published ("Miss Piggy's Guide to Life"). She is also appearing, along with more than a hundred other Muppet characters, as part of the "Art of the Muppets" exhibit at the California State Museum of Science and Industry in Los Angeles, through Feb. 8.

The exhibit traces the Muppets from creator Jim Henson's 1954 local television program in Washington, D.C., to their present worldwide exposure in television and films. It is rumored that Muppeteer Frank Oz, who joined Henson in 1964, is the one who really pulls Miss Piggy's strings. Asked to confirm this report, the actress abruptly changed the subject.

Miss Piggy is always overdressed, a fact that she is proud to point out. Sighs her New York designer, Calista Hendrickson, who has been dressing the petite, chubby actress for more than five years: "Piggy dresses as if she is 30 pounds lighter. She is totally unaware that she is overweight. She simply has to have what-ever's in. She admires Halston, Yves Saint Laurent and the Balenciaga look, but I am the one who interprets them in her size."

Miss Piggy is particular about such things as neatness and cleanliness, perhaps as a reaction against her humble beginnings. Her rejection of her childhood also is evidenced by her daily beauty routine. For example, she absolutely will not use mudpacks — her facials are made of mousse au chocolat. Other tips from Miss Piggy on beauty and

London's American and 'American' Restaurants

by Catherine Caufield

ONDON — American eating places are springing up all over London, but no one in or out of the business seems to be able to say just what an "American" restaurant is.

In prehistoric times - that is, before the English made hamburgers (or "beefburgers," as they are called in their most disgusting form) a staple food - an American restaurant was by definition a hamburger joint. When it opened 10 years ago the Hard Rock

Cafe, near Hyde Park Corner (150 Old Park Lane, W.1), set the standard for such establishments with loud music, simple menus and an informal atmosphere. As with "The Mousetrap," the Queen Mother and other institutions, its popularity has not diminished

The Hard Rock's success was due in large part to its creation of a new category of restaurant in Britain. English, French and Italian restaurants tended, if good, to be formal and expensive. Chinese and Indian food was cheaper, but a steady regimen of plastictopped tables and fluorescent lights takes its toll in other ways.

The Hard Rock — and its imitators — offered good, plain food in more salubrious surroundings at reasonable prices. Its hamburgers and french fries are probably the best in town, but it also serves steaks, chili and American desserts (hot fudge sundaes, apple pie a la mode). Dinner for two with a bottle of house wine will cost about £10 (about $25).

Lately two different types of American restaurants have come on the scene — and confused matters considerably. The fast food chains — McDonald's, Kentucky Fried Chicken and so on - have made great inroads in Britain. One sad consequence is that many fish and chip shops are having to close because their customers prefer a McDonald's fish sandwich in a Styrofoam box to the real, greasy, smelly, delicious thing wrapped in paper.

At the other end of the scale are a number of establishments that try to recreate the atmosphere of certain types of regional American restaurants. The impossibility of transplanting an authentic New York saloon, Midwestern diner, Tex-Mex canteen or Creole case to London has given rise to some hilariously inap-propriate combinations. But sometimes, oddly enough, these mutants work; they take on a

One very successful venture is the Chicago

Pizza Pie Factory (17 Hanover Square, W.1), offering dubiously "authentic" but genuinely delicious American deep-dish pizzas, garlic bread, stuffed mushrooms, cheesecake and American beer for about £5 a person. The proprietor, Bob Payton, a former account director with J. Walter Thompson, had no experience in catering but seems to know what Londoners want. His Hanover Square establishment has been such a success that he has recently opened another Pizza Pie Factory in Bath.

There is a somewhat contrived atmosphere of zaniness and good humor about the place. Payton's philosophy is distinctly fast-food — with speedy turnover a high priority. I strongly object to being hustled out the minute I've laid down my knife and fork. No coffee is served before 2:15 p.m., and customers are limited to a single cup in the evenings.

Joe Allen (13 Exeter Street, W.C.2), an offshoot of the New York theater restaurant, serves a useful function for actors and theatergoers in a city where few restaurants welcome late-night diners (i.e., anything after 9:30 p.m. in London). The restaurant is all exposed brick, modern prints and friendly waiters. It puts a two-hour limit on table bookings. though one can transfer to the bar afterward.

The food is a disappointment. The Caesar salad lacked anchovies, the corn bread was tasteless, the chicken and spareribs are coated with a glutinous and oversweet barbecue borough Street, W.11 was opened last year by four American businessmen, none of whom had any experience in running a restaurant and whose approach to it would reduce Michel Guerard to tears of rage. According to Bob Leaf, one of the four and the genial president of a major public relations agency. "It began in the genial president of the four and the genial president of the genial president o in the summer of 1978 when I was thinking about market segmentation."

Despite the restaurant's name, nothing was left to chance in its planning. The waiters and waitresses, for instance, are put through a four-day training course at the end of which they can walk up to anyone anywhere and say with a confident smile, "Hi! My name's Sandy and I'm your waiter for this evening."

Surprise serves such regional specialties as jambalaya, clam chowder, com fritters, chopped chicken livers and corned beef hash as well as old standards such as steak, lobster and sandwiches.

Surprise also has some inventions of its own. particularly liked its special appetizer mackerel pate wrapped in a slice of smoked salmon. The corned beef hash, which wasn't like Mother used to make, was a disappointment; however, it seemed to be very popular with other diners, so perhaps their mothers made it differently.

The atmosphere at Surprise is low key — no loud music or overwhelming decorations — and the food is well-prepared and pleasantly served. Dinner for two with a drink and a bottle of house wine will be about £25.

Lafayette (32 King Street St. James's, S.W.!) does not claim to be an all-American restaurant, but like its namesake it has American connections. Eggs New Orleans (poached eggs with crabmeat), crayfish-tail salad, New England clam chowder and chili con carne share the menu with frog legs, mussel some and rog-nons de veau dijornaise. My salmon with sorrel sauce and my companion's venison chops with cranberries were both superb. Lafayette also does after-theater light dinners and snacks: croque monsieur, spareribs, smoked salmon and scrambled eggs.

Lafayette is not so much American as to contemplate the possibility of fast-food service. Our meal took 4½ hours, but the service was so pleasant and attentive that we felt not so much that if we were being kept waiting but that we were proceeding at a civilized pace. I do object, however, to being charged as much for a bottle of Malvern Water as for a bottle of house wine. Dinner for two with wine and water is about £40 (including service) - £35 if you stick to wine

Hong Kong Arts Festival

by Harry Rolaick

ONG KONG - The Hong Kong Arts Festival, opening Sunday eve ning, still has no competition in Asia. Japan may have infinitely more musical and dramatic events throughout the year. But it's a formidable challenge for a territory the size of this thumbnail British colony to fill 88,000 seats with a month of modem dance, jazz, soloists, Chinese opera, Old

Vic drama and three symphony orchestras.

When the festival started nine years ago, the artists were perhaps more glamorous — Isaac Stern, Seiji Ozawa, Shura Cherkassky and Erich Leinsdorf, among others. The original idea was to fill Hong Kong's hotels during the fallow-cool season, and the festival committee felt that star-studded performances should do it - but within two years the committee was near bankruptcy

Today the budget is a relatively small 6 million Hong Kong dollars (about $1.16 million). And with hotel rooms now at a premium all year round, the festival is particularly suited for local consumption. But within these limitations, the Hong Kong organizers, in tandem with the British artist management firm of Anthony Chardet, has managed to pack in a solid month's artistic entertainment, albeit of a very conservative nature.

The orchestras will play what they are best known for. From England, the Halle Orchestra. will concentrate on Elgar, a composer with whom it has been associated since its inception. The Swedish Radio Orchestra will focus on Scandinavians — Berwald, Nielsen, Rosenberg - while Hong Kong's own Philharmonic conducted by Ling Tung, will do, besides the usual Liszt, Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky, the only avant-garde work in the festival, "Mi Patri," by Witold Lutoslawki.

The soloists will be mainly from the United Kingdom. Pianist John Lill will perform a Beethoven concerto, as well as Beethoven's "Hammerklavier." Composer John McCabe will play his own piano concerto with the Halle Orchestra. Violinist Boris Belkin will perform, as well as the Music Group of London. Jazz will come hot, from London's Midnite Pollies Orchestra, and cool from Australia's Don Burrows.

Only two plays will be presented, both by the Old Vic: "The Merchant of Venice" and Pinero's "Trelawny of The Wells'." Through a tie-up with the Hong Kong school system seminars about the plays will be held by Old Vic directors before the performances. Student tickets for almost all the performances will offset by fantasy. Stylistically, he has always written with a dual purpose, at once exploring the avant-garde while maintaining a solid con-nection with Catalan literary tradition. He is known for his long and wonderful titles, which are like little short stories in themselves. One begins, "We Arrived in That Village and No ways We Could Hear the Murmur of Those Who Were and Their Dances, and the Chinks in the Walls Shall Sketch the Face of Those to Come...

Often termed a Surrealist, Foix insists that he has "always been independent of schools. I write beyond precepts, with absolutely no regard to how the Germans, the Americans, the French or the Soviets write. The poet, magician, speculator of words, pilgrim of the invisible, adventurer at the limit of dreams, expects nothing for himself." His work resounds with the Mediterranean Catalan landscape and the ominous shadow of Franco, who could never be referred to directly.

Let us be guardians of day at the heart's And paint

- Over the rock, the asphalt, under the That conquers time and sound, and over the roaring metals Which furrow other skies

- Who dies dies not." After the Loyalist victory in 1939, many Catalan intellectuals emigrated, particularly to French Catalonia across the border, some returning only upon Franco's death. In 1941, the underground Catalan review, Poetry, began publication in the outlawed language, and in 1948 Foix's "The Unreal Omegas" appeared, reflecting the era of the civil war. "The censorship for poetry was freer," he said. "Now and then, when they'd read it, they might see the lines had a double meaning." lines had a double meaning.

Foix accepts the changing face of Catalonia.
When I was 15, the whole world was Catalan. Everything, the schools, books, all people spoke was Catalan." In the late 1920s small groups of laborers and their families from Andalusia began to come to Catalonia for work, "but the populations never mixed. Later, whole villages came, including the mayor. So you had those speaking Castilian [Spanish] and those speaking Catalan."

Though many younger Catalan writers have visited Foix and sent him their books, "I'm not familiar with what they're writing about. They're from a later time" than those such as Salvador Espriu, whose generation was the last to grow up before the civil war.

The blossoming of modern Catalan litera-ture encourages Foix. Yet, in the end, the problems of the artist remain: "The poet knows that every poem is a cry of liberty."

'The Revolt' Suits a Period Actress

by Vicky Elliott

ONDON -"You're not troubling people, are you?" the anxious mother asks her rapscallion 10-yearold son. There is a rustle of taffeta skirts as she sweeps around the room. buttoned up into her neat-waisted lilac bodice. A prim Victorian mistress of the house, she graciously restores order to the jumble: the Action Man toy, the exercise books, the empty yogurt

Susan Hampshire seems out of place in the debris of a 1980s dressing room, and her costume suits her better than would modern clothing. Critics have commented that Hampshire is "some-what handicapped by her own demureness" but this well-bred prissiness has netted her many period parts, notably as the brittle, capricious Fleur in the widely broadcast "Forsyte Saga." Her lat-est role is in "The Revolt," by the French poet Villiers de l'Isle Adam (New End Theatre, Hampstead, through Feb. l), in which she plays Elisabeth, a dissident wife in a prophetic 19th-century forerunner of "Kramer vs. Kramer,"

For the last 6½ years Hampshire has worked in the theater. She gave up television (she was also seen in "The First Churchills" and "The Deferre in 1967, but they are now divorced.) "I Pallisers") because, as she says apologetically, "People get fed up with you if they see too much of you." Her film credits include "Living Free" and "David Copperfield," and onstage in London she has put her stamp on such roles as Kate in "The Taming of the Shrew," making sense of the part in her own way by portraying the fierce Kate as a woman mixed up and unhappy with herself.

At 38, Hampshire still has the retrousse nose and the trim figure for far younger roles. She and the trim figure for far younger roles. She enjoyed playing her first real comic role in Tom Stoppard's "Night and Day" and would like to explore comedy further — though she says, diffidently, "Comedy is God's gift; it all depends on perfect timing" — as if she wasn't up to it herself. If she could get back into television, she could see more of her son. Christopher and the same could see more of her son. Christopher was the same could see more of her son. pher. But Britain's new rash of unemployment hasn't helped Equity members, who spend a lot of their time in the best of circumstances waiting at home for the telephone to ring. Hampshire isn't proud, and she is happy to play what she gets.

Starting in March, she will tour provincial towns in a Francis Durbridge thriller, playing suppose you could call it the part of a dis-tressed mother," she says with a slight twinkle, as Christopher bursts in again brandishing a tov revolver.

She and French director Simone Bennussa managed to sandwich "The Revolt" between other engagements. The short play — it runs just under an hour — successfully grapples with a classic theme: the conflict between the down-to-earth and the dreamer. A perfect wife, "of pleasant appearance and sweet dispo-sition," stages a rebellion against her husband, whose fortune she has built up single-handed She accuses this smirking bourgeois of "snatching at banknotes in midair like butter-flies" and, shedding submission and self-control, she rages against the blinkered existence he has imposed upon her more sensitive spirit.

When the play originally appeared, in 1870, the honest brokers of Paris sniffed out its subversiveness immediately. They were appalled both by its vehement stand on women's rights and its denunciation of capitalism, and within five days the play was closed down.

This was another blow to Count Philippe Villiers de l'Isle Adam, a penniless aristocrat whose father had wasted the family fortune on wild-goose chases after buried treasure. The poet's attempts to create new literary movement that he called "supernaturalism" were equally unsuccessful. He was reduced to railing at the bourgeoisie, "who see no straighter than a gravedigger — whip their old black nags as they will, they'll never go anywhere but the cemetery.

Villiers is remembered for his "Cruel Stories," a French variation on Poe, but he also had a streak of the prophet in him. In 1870, he predicted the advent of the cinema and its impact: "Soon there will be 400-500 theaters in every capital city, where ordinary everyday events will be presented so much more vividly than in reality that no one will bother to live his own life for himself anymore."

"I was fascinated by such an advanced piece of writing, which appeared nine years be-fore 'The Doll's House,' 'Hampshire said of "The Revolt," ex-plaining that Villiers identified Elisabeth's dilemma with his own as a poet. The implication, she said, is that "poets were as suppressed as women to say what they wanted." Behind the flowery language (powerfully trans-lated by Donald Watson) lurks a strong political message: a defense of freedom.

Hampshire, without actually mentioning Vanessa Redgrave or Jane Fonda, said she does not believe in using her profession to fur-ther her political views. But she has been campaigning recently. Accustoming herself to public speaking (offstage) around Britain, she has become a recognized champion of those af-flicted with dyslexia — reading disability — and is struggling to finish a book about it.

"People wouldn't want to read a textbook," she said. As a dyslexic herself, she should be in a good position to provide the human interest angle. When she was young, she said, dyslexics, an estimated 12 percent of the population, were considered backward or lazy, and no help was available. But new remedial treatment can aid a child who is identified as dyslexic as early as age 5 or 6.

"I learned to live with it," she said. She arrives at rehearsals word perfect, having learned her part off a tape recorder because she has trouble reading scripts. Writing the book has not come easily, and she has still 20,000 words of autobiographical material to go. "It's hard," said Hampshire candidly. "One must be truthful about oneself."

erbier: Hot Spot for Serious Skiers

by Calla Corner

STRIN TERBIER, Switzerland - Verbier isn't as chic as St. Moritz (you'll see more down parkas than fur coats) or as charming as Zermatt, but it's the st spot in Switzerland for skiers looking owder instead of people.

Inganite th 100 trails facing in all directions to asitains of snowfields, the nondescript vilof Verbier on the French-Italian border is one American da bum who all calls, simply, "the greatest."

Erugged mountain village suffering from and cows' milk, Verbier was about to pass oblivion 35 years ago. Then the locals ced up and decided to do something with natural resources hanging over them. By the village had been turned into a bussel ski base, with a system of chairlifts, tele-cabines and gondolas fanning up and out in a semicircle to catch every ray of sun and exploit every snowlake that the Swiss Valais produc-

The locals are still looking up: At the end of 1981 the first step will be completed for a new super-lift that by 1983 will carry 900 powder purists on an hour's ride to the top of Mt. Fort (3,328 meters). With helicopter skiing now outlawed in France for ecological reasons and similar laws under consideration in other Alpine countries. Verbier's high-altitude place in the sun is assured.

expert skiers is Mt. Gele (3,023 meters), with its hair-raising, perpendicular powder trails.

For off-piste skiing, the Valon Darbi and Champ Feret are the best bet, but only in the morning before there's a risk of avalanche. For the average skier who can handle workout, there is a run uniting Verbier, La Tzoumaz, Haute Nendaz, Thyon and Veysonnaz in a five-hour round trip through four valleys, pine forests and over tops of mountains between Zermatt and the Grand-Combin.

Mostly a village of chalets or chalet-style partment blocks (which can be rented through the local tourist board, sometimes with a maid so that you can save your energy for the slopes). Verbier nevertheless has 30 hotels. Particularly recommended are Le Mazot (55 to 85 Swiss francs) and Farinet (66 to 99 francs), with meals, and Mirabeau (37 to 52 francs) without meals.

Eating is not taken as seriously as sport is in Verbier, but there are good restaurants to fuel you up: L'Ecurie for French nouvelle cuisine, La Luge for steak. Vieux Verbier for Swiss fa and Le Fer a Cheval for a really good pizza.

The best ski shop, with top service, is Ski Service, which rents and sells the latest American and European ski togs and equipment. Its 12 staff members know what they are talking about and have dark winter tans to prove it.

'Ethical-Political' German Festival

by Michael Gibson

ARIS - What distinguishes West German art of the 1970s from that of the same period in France or the United States? A festival of sorts has been jointly organized by the Goethe Institute (17 avenue d'lena) and the ARC Section of the Musee d'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris (11 avenue du President Wilson, to March 8) that allows the spectator to muse over that question not only by viewing German art but also by getting acquainted with German cinema, theater and music, and by attending debates (some in French and some in German) on a variety of related subjects.

Gunter Grass visited to inaugurate a show of his engravings at the Goethe Institute and one of his drawings at Galerie Mazarine (34 rue Mazarine, to Jan. 31), and to read some chapters from his novels, so literature is also represented, though German lyric poetry, which still has a lot of vitality, was neglected.

Trying to find a common denominator in the works presented at the museum is no easy undertaking, and the variety defies any brief attempt at description, but one can fairly safely state that many of the participants are linked by a latent or manifest ethical-political concern. In some instances the presence of a given artist in the show seems more deter-mined by the fact that he shares in this concern than by the actual "merit" of his work (to the extent that the word has any significance in this context). This may answer the question about what distinguishes West German art.

It is particularly apparent in the way Joseph

Benys goes about his work. Benys is without doubt the most visible artist in West Germany today, and one reason is that he is perfect fare for the media. He has elaborated a public per-sona for himself that has the same sort of imsona for himself that has the same sort of impact as, say, Dali's. In Benys' case we are faced with a figure not unlike that of one of the tramps in "Waiting for Godot": oversize black coat and a gray felt hat that one is inclined to imagine him wearing even in bed.

Benys presented a film of himself in New York. We see him arriving at Kennedy Airport, being wrapped in a felt blanket and conveyed by ambulance to the Rene Bloch Gal-lery, where he spent a week, day and night, locked up with a untamed but friendly coyote. At the end of the film he is taken back to the airport in the ambulance.

A debate followed the showing of the film, and Beuys revealed a good deal of humor, warnth and patient goodwill, answering questions that were sometimes delirious and sometimes aggressive, and holding the audience's interest throughout. At one point a woman made a comment to the effect that having seen the film and heard and seen him she could sense a coherence between Beuys as a human being and his action. But looking at his work in the museum, she said, she felt only a painful

"Modern art is difficult," said Benys with sympathy. "I also suffer from this state of af-

Beuys' works on their own do tend to look like dreary enigmas, but the man himself catches the imagination by his actions and his talk because he is a sort of prophet speaking out for an ethical cause. He is not an intellectual and his manifestos are written in a flat-footed prose that is almost readerproof. The work or the prose without the man is mostly irritating, but the man is a phenomenon comparable to Diogenes and it is his presence (and his implansible actions and fuzzy but not stu-pid discussions from day to day) that accounts for the stature he has acquired in his own

This may seem a lot of space to devote to one artist from a show that includes some 50 painters, sculptors and so on. But Berrys is the most revealing instance of an attitude that is common to probably all of the participants in more or less visible form.

Wolf Vostell is represented by, among other things, an environment combining a barbed wire fence, a couple of suitcases with blaring radios inside them and a mass of spoons and forks spread out on the ground like gravel. A cheery, round man who wears the traditional curis of the orthodox Jew, Vosteil declares that his intention is to make the viewer mindful of Fascism in its day-to-day manifestations by creating a durable association between everyday objects and barbed wire.

What painting the show does include is on the whole devoid of interest as painting. There the whole devoid of interest as painting. There are a number of young neo-Expressionist painters such as Georg Baselitz (who paints his subjects upside down for motives that, to this day, escape me); Joerg Immendorff, who favors a murky palette to depict rather obscure goings-on; and Achim Freyer, whose paintings are rather less persuasive than the costumes he produced for Dieter Schnebel's "Koerper-Sprache" (also being performed at the museum).

A certain amount of humor is equally apparent in the form of Dieter Roth's cultural sausages, Andrea Tippel's doodles, and other

proach that might be described as minimal realism or the minimal dream. Keats said imagination is like Adam's dream "- he awoke and found it truth." Art, in this sense, can be called the dream of mankind in a given age. Germa-ny has suffered from some demagogic dreams in the recent past, and its most serious artists today seem wary of dreams in general. As a defense they use derision, or refuse to allow the imagination to wander beyond certain strictly defined limits. In the narrow yards thus measured out they act out various, more or less agile games. But the fact is that they are in the opposi-tion, outside the society whose officials are taking a lot of trouble to show the artists' works in France. Their feeling appears to be that the old dreams are still stubbornly present in the society, and no great vistas are possible until they have been uprooted. The austerity is painful and dull. I doubt that Beuys' work need be so consistantly arid. It may be that he has not really found an adequate form within the medium he has chosen or that he had become more persona than art ist. It may be that all these checks and inhibitions tend to make "art" into a disquieting ethical plea but at the same time prevent the blooming in art, of something that makes it art and really is art's business.

The Musee d'Art Moderne is celebrating the centenary of Andre Derain's birth with a small exhibition of paintings, lithographs, woodcuts, vases and bas-reliefs (to March 8). Derain, who died in 1954, began his career as a Fauviste and went his own way thereafter, without following the succession of movements that marked the first half of this century. The exhibition assembles about 50 items and gives an idea of his versatility, but also shows how he fell a victim to the notion of French classicism

The Time Is Right for Grasset

by Souren Melikian

ARIS - Scoops are still to be made on the art market. But in order to turn them into profitable coups, proper tim-ing is essential. The point has just been made by Francoise Blondel and Yves Plannin with their surprising exhibition of Engene Grasser's work, on through March 31 at 33 me

Grasset's name today means little outside a narrow circle of art historians focusing on the sources of 20th-century graphics and design. Yet in the closing years of the last century his fame spread on both sides of the Atlantic. Harper's Magazine commissioned him to draw Christmas issue covers and posters. His 1897 poster showing an angel blowing a trumpet against a background of mistletoe heralds much of the Art Nouveau of 1900 and even

Indeed, the message that comes across at this exhibition, which includes drawings, posters, books and even a large enameled plaque, is that Grasset was one of the great innovators of the age. He was born in 1841 in Lan-sanne, hardly an avant-garde center. His fa-ther, a tradition-minded cabinetmaker, was slightly appalled on discovering that his son's dream was to become a painter. Hoping to di-vert the youth's interests toward architecture, which sounded more businesslike, he packed off the 16-year old Eugene to the Polytechni-cum in Zurich.

Eugene became enthusiastic about architecture but much less so about the educational system. He was 18 when he left for Paris with a friend, as did all young men who dreamed of Art. He traveled. In Egypt he was impressed by the linear design of Egyptian bas-reliefs. When he settled in Paris for good, in 1871, the discovery of Japanese prints, which he began to collect on a small scale, gave him the second shock of his life. That did not stop him from looking at every art form with the encyclopedic curiosity so typical of his time. In the exhibition, a small-size copy of the famous mosaic portrait of Queen Theodora at Ravenna discloses an unsuspected interest in Byzan-Grasset worked as a typographer, designer and illustrator. The series of engravings he completed in 1883 for a text based on a medieval romance, "Les Quatre Freres Aymon," created a style of book illustration that was to be slavishly imitated in publishing for the next 20 years. In Grasset's layout, text and image have become inseparable. For the first time since the Middle Ages, illustrations are pushed into the margins, as in illuminated mann-

But his major contribution was to the art of the poster. Grasset was the first to introduce the linear handling of figures and volumes borrowed from Japanese woodcuts, and spread color uniformly within their contours. As in his illustrated books, only more strikingly so, the text became integrated with the figurative elements instead of being merely printed across the image. Last but not least, the designer invented Expressionist typography. In his poster called "L'Andalousie an Temps des Maures," showing a Moor and a European knight in armor charging in single combat, the three lines of text undulate in a wavelike movement. The typefaces are both cutting and sinuous in appearance. The seemingly kitsch, even vulgar design is a landmark in graphic invention. It was among the first works sold in the exhibition, for 4,500 francs to a Parisian publisher who collects posters. The New World quickly recognized the innovative creativity of such a man. Alain Weill, curator of the Musee de l'Affiche in Paris. claims in his preface to the exhibition catalog that one of Grasser's posters done for the Century Magazine in 1894 signals the introduction of "artistic posters" on the American scene. issue of the French monthly Art et Decoration. In 1898, further preparatory sketches by Grasset were exhibited at the "Salon de la Plume." The catalog tersely described them as "stained glass [projects] for the church at Houston, Texas." But when the John de Mesnil Foundation in Houston sponsored the great Art Nouveau traveling exhibition, Mrs. Dominique de Mesnil failed to trace the elusive windows. They may well be lying unidentified in the back yard of some junk dealer.

Most professionals browsing around for antiques would hardly have a cine as to what they are. For the time being, Grasset's work is at best a shadowy memory, even though his frontispiece to the Nouveau Larousse Illustre, printed in 1898, became the symbol of encyclopedic knowledge for two generations of

There are several reasons for Grasset's present-day obscurity. One is that some of his most daring innovations are perceptible to the professional alone in their kitsch disguise. Another is that the versatile Grasset created too

Galleries In Switzerland

Switzerland? Sounds unlikely, perhaps. But this country has a strong tradition of receptivity to outside art trends when they are still in the laughed-at stage. So in that sense, yes: There is an avant-garde in Switzerland. A handful of museum curators, galleries, private collectors and artists make up a network well linked to the latest in the United States, Britain, Italy and West Germany, the current hotbeds of the avantgarde. The accent is on awareness and importation. In the case of artists, most opt for adapting tenden-cies established abroad, with the really good ones usually moving abroad and becoming part of the mainstream in their adopted countries. Only one creative movement has actually flowered on Swiss soil: Dada, established in 1916 by emigres in Zurich.

The stronghold of the avantgarde spirit is usually seen as the German-speaking part of Switzer-land. The Kunsthallen, public galleries whose aim is to present contemporary art, contribute a great deal toward acceptance of modern trends, particularly in Basel, Lucerne and Bern, where these galler-ies' directors are particularly fine.

Basel has a new Museum of Contemporary Art housing the Museum of Art's adventurous purchases and those of the Hoffmann (as in La Roche) Foundation. Count Panza di Biumo, one of the world's best-known collectors of the new in art, has chosen Basel as a repository for his collection of conceptual and Minimalist art. Zurich boasts a courageous commercial art gallery, owned by Annemarie Verna, as well as INK, renovated factory with activities exhibitions, performance art, commissioning original spaces from artists — funded by Switzer-land's biggest food retailer, Migros. Zurich's Kunsthaus recently showed among its latest acquisi-tions a collection of American Minimalist drawings, and even staid Bern's art museum presented a program of video works last sea-

The problem with avant-garde is that once a trend becomes a trend, acquired and shown by museums, it is already passe — not, perhaps, in the eyes of a greater public still trying to get used to Picasso and Miro, but in the sense that it often measures yesterday's and not tomorrow's creative pulse. The galleries are the place to find the latter. Curiously, Geneva — a city whose art scene is generally considered retrograde — has more galleries presenting important new possibilities than any other Swiss

One such gallery, the Centre of Art Contemporain (16, rue d'Ital-ie), is a nonprofit organization par-tially funded by Migros. The other two, Marika Malacorda (1, rue de Nyon, 23 kilometers outside Geneva, at 1, ruelle de la Tour), are privately owned. Like Zurich's Annemar ie Verna gallery, all are run by young women — Adelina von Furstenberg at the center, the others by the women whose names they

Loyse Oppenheim's program strongly accents "narration art" and "new imagery," in which photographs like genre paintings, such those of Marc Camille Chaimowicz, or painted figurative fragments (Bill Beckley, for in-stance) are juxtaposed with bits of text. Paolo Colombo and Paolo Lunanova represent "the new Italians," artists using tender, whimsical and frequently figurative ele-ments rendered in a very painterly

Marika Malacorda leans to space-filling art — objects hanging on a wall or arranged in a space, performance or video scene. This is often very conceptual art, requiring a newer set of aesthetic criteria on the part of the viewer-participant than do, say, the narrative artists.

The Centre d'Art Contemporain has no program other than remaining open to the newest at all times. As von Furstenberg puts it: "Our role is to research." Several shows running simultaneously may include many of the artists shown by Oppenheim or Malacorda. Like Malacorda, the center features per-formance art and puts space at the disposal of artists to fill as they choose. The center is also active in the publishing of "artist books" — original texts, photographs and illustrations in traditional if unconventional book form.

Von Furstenberg, who, in bringing to Geneva major events in modern theater, music and art has her finger very much on the pulse of contemporary life, feels that the fusion of these previously very separate areas is very important to artists right now. Music performance — a combination punk-rock band and artist's performance seems particularly promising Lu-

Geffrye Reconstructs Evelyn Study

by Max Wykes-Joyce

ONDON - On Nov. 5, 1665 - "The Lord's day" — Samuel Pepys, the most celebrated gossip and man-about-town in the English language, called upon the second most famous chronicler of his times, John Evelyn.

The 'closet of curiousities,' at right.

diary, "and there made a visit to Mr. Evelyn, who ... read me very much of his discourse, he hath been many years and now is about, about Gardenage [presumably "The Gardener's Al-manack; What to do monthly throughout the Year"]...part of a play or two of his own making. He read me, though with too much gusto, some little poems of his own, that were not transcendant, yet one or two very pretty epigrams."

The gardening manuscript, the plays and the poems would all have been shelved in a fine ebony cabinet, decorated with engravings of landscapes and flowers, that Evelyn's wife Mary had commissioned from a furniture maker in Paris in 1652, at a cost of 800 livres. At the time when Pepys visited Evelyn at Sayes Court, a manor house in the Thames-side village of Deptford, five miles downstream from the City of London, the cabinet formed the centerpiece of Evelyn's "closet of curiousities."

Any 17th-century gentleman with pretensions to scholarship would have such a room in his house, well-furnished and displaying a collection of "curiousities" - in Evelyn's case, as we know from his own inventory, including a stuffed annadillo, a rock crystal cup in the form of a seashell, rare porcelains, a sculpture in serpentine stone and the skull of a turtle.

Evelyn's study, including the cabinet, purchased in 1979 for £18,000 ($43,200), has now been reconstructed as the 17th-century room in the sequence of period rooms from Eliza-beth Tudor to the late 1930s that constitute the main part of the Geffrye Museum. Situated in Shoreditch, traditionally the furniture-making district of London, the Geffrye Museum is housed in the deconsecrated chapel and the shell of 14 almshouses built in the 1720s under the terms of the will of Sir Robert Geffrye, Lord Mayor of London and Master of the Ironmongers' Company, one of the city's an-

For 200 years the buildings served as dwellings for the needy widows of dry goods store-keepers, but with the changing times they outlasted their usefulness. In 1910 they were bought by the London County Council (now the Greater London Council) chiefly for the treclined garden which fronts the building This was opened to the public as a park in 1912, and two years later the houses themselves opened as a museum of furniture and cabinet-making.

In the 1930s, under the curatorship of the social historian Marjorie Quenzell, the collection of furniture was set out in a series of simulated period rooms, with stage-decor backdrops. Under the present curator, the art historian and critic Jeffery Daniels, this policy has been continued and augmented by the ac tion of major items of decorative art, su the massive Jacobean carved oak chimnerfrom an Essex country house, the shot and interior fittings of an 18th-century house woodworker's shop and, of course, Evelyn's cabinet. Other innovations incl. small but choice gallery of original cost and period-dressed dolls and some impo drawings and paintings, illustrative of the cial customs relative to the 12 period room

That bid is also linked with his forthcoming project, "Cocaine," which will be primed with an international cast and, in all likelihood, shot in English. The sensational pulp novel by Italian writer known as Pitigrilli (Dino Segre, 1893-1975) was a scandal in Mussolini's time; it is ready-made for the enfant terrible side of Fassbinder's character. The film required locations in Italy, France and South America.

While Fassbinder has been scouting Brazil, Werner Herzog is up the Amazon filming "Fitzcarraldo," the story of a mad rubber baron starring Jason Robards, Claudia Cardinale and Mick Jagger. The $6-million project is being produced by Herzog with backing from international investors, a hot trick that could ruin the romantic, individualist filmmaker if misfortune keeps plagning him in the jungle. His first location had to be abandoned when the Indians in an Andean village refused to cooperate with the production crew. Whatever the result, however, Herzog's long-standing reputation as the leading West German cult director in U.S. art houses and on university campuses is seemingly money in the bank

Wenders has fallen on rougher days. His "Hammett" for Orion Pictures was in the can last April, save for the optional ending - and then producer Francis Ford Coppola needed the services of house-actor Frederic Forrest, who plays the detective-writer Dashiell Hammett, for rehearsals for Coppola's "One from the Heart." Wenders cannot resume shooting until this April, some three years after signing with Coppola's company for the project.

Meanwhile, Wenders is reportedly ready to start shooting his second American feature, The Trap Door," at MGM.

Schloendorff is in Beirut hustling to finish his adaptation of Nicholas Born's novel "The Forgery" in time for the Cannes festival. In "The Forgery," Born, who died of cancer in 1979 at age 42, told the story of the Beirut street fighting in 1977 through the eyes of a foreign correspondent. If Schloendorff finishes on schedule, he will have the inside track "German" production, for Schygulla and no Ganz, the country's leading stars,

Multinationals Fear Ideological Line

U.S. Trade Appointments Cause a Stir

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — High-level appointments related to international trade are causing intense infighting in the Reagan administration, as speculation heightens about shifts in the relative importance of key departments and agencies.

Many analysts inside and outside government see the State Department, which lost some important trade battles during the Carter adminis-tration, being strengthened at the expense of the Office of the Trade Representative and the Commerce Department.

The result, the analysts say, could be a greater diffusion of authority in the trade field, instead of the centralization that had been a goal of the Carter administration and trade specialists on Capitol Hill in recent years.

Most controversy centers on the key job of assistant secretary for import and export adminis-tration at the Commerce Department. This is the job that, among other things, controls license ap-plications for exports to the Soviet Union, an area where much heat has been generated in recent years because of differing perceptions of the Rus-sian threat and ways to deal with it in trade and

Protests From Multinationals

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, ac-cording to several sources in the Reagan adminis-tration, is considering a man known for his hard-line views against trade with the Russians.

But the prospective selection of Lawrence Bra-dy, a former acting director of the Office of Export Administration at the Commerce Department and a Reagan supporter in New Hampshire, has stirred protests from multinational firms that sell to the Soviet Union. Representatives of several firms have been urging Mr. Baldrige, an industrialist himself, to pick someone who is less ideologically committed.

An executive explained: "It's not that we support the Russians, but if the goods aren't strategic and Russians can buy them easily elsewhere, then we're just shooting ourselves in the foot."

A Washington trade consultant, Harald Malmgren, added: "Commerce should administer export controls fairly, steadily and methodically. But to make Commerce a national security center is wrong. Those are decisions better left to State and Defense."

Center of a Storm

Mr. Brady was in the center of a storm in 1979 when he publicly accused his Commerce Department superiors of "covering up" military diver-sion by the Russians of trucks at the giant Kama River plant built with American equipment. He said export licenses for this equipment should have been suspended. Some of these trucks were later identified in Afghanistan.

After Mr. Brady was relieved of his duties, the chief investigator for the Federal Civil Service Merit Systems Protection Board found that he was being punished as a "whistle blower" and re-commended his reinstatement.

Commerce Department officials strenuously denied a cover-up. The chief counsel of the Com-merce Department, C.L. Haslam, said in a December, 1979, letter to the Civil Service investigator that Mr. Brady was performing his duties "poorly." The letter said Mr. Brady "remains negative and uncooperative, and all efforts at collegiality or cooperation have failed."

SEC Chiefs Talk Back to Reagan Team

By Paul Nussbaum Los Angeles Times Service

CORONADO, Calif. - The chairman and the chief enforcement officer of the Securities and Exchange Commission have sharply criticized a report by the Reagan administration's transition team recommending sharp changes in

Chairman Harold Williams, who will leave his post on March 1 to make way for a Reagan appointee, said Thursday that his successor should "ignore the transition re-port." He called it "internally inconsistent, with misassumptions and replete with factual errors." The report recommends cutting years from the present $85 million. rate bribery. The report suggested that the commission's powerful chief of the enforcement division, Stanley Sporkin, may need to be removed to make way for reduced emphasis on enforcement of securities laws.

Mr. Sporkin and Mr. Williams were in Coronado for a three-day conference of the Securities Regulation Institute. The enforcement chief said budget cuts of the type recommended by Mr. Reagan's team would make it impossible for the SEC's enforcement division to do its job properly.

"I would think law enforcement would be a strong point of the new administration," said Mr. Sporkin, who has been praised but has also aroused the ire of some in the business community by leading aggressive enforcement efforts against the commussion's staff nearly in ness community by leading aggreshalf and reducing its budget by about 30 percent over the next two market manipulation and corposion's Washington staff from 200 to 50. With that kind of reduction, Mr. Sporkin said, it would be impossible for the SEC to police securities violations -- "mless evcrybody suddenly becomes honest, and then you wouldn't need any-body." He added, "I don't think that's going to happen."

Asked about the prospects of Mr. Sporkin's removal, Mr. Williams said he could not "imagine that happening." He said it would take an act of Congress to make sweeping changes in the role and responsibilities of the SEC.

Under civil service law, Mr. Sporkin cannot be fired without cause, but he can be removed as division head. He said he will wait until a replacement for Mr. Wil-liams is named before he decides The Reagan team's report pro- how to approach his own future.

The decline in oil consumption is likely to continue this year, although probably at a lower-rate, senior IEA officials said Friday. They said that the 1980 fall in demand is one reason why oil prices have risen by little more than 10 percent in the past six months, to just over $35 a barrel, despite loss of exports from Iraq and Iran due to their war.

The recent price changes compare with a rise of 150 percent in the 18 months to last summer. Figures from some individual countries, among them the United States and West Germany, show

It said many experts expected the gain in efficiency to accelerate. following latest oil-price increases, and daily U.S. imports to shrink to 4 million barrels or less by 1990 from 6.3 million now.

But Exxon said in its latest survey of the world energy outlook that it expects U.S. oil imports to peak at about 8.5 million barrels daily in 1985 before declining to 4 million by the end of the century.

Exxon sees total world demand for oil increasing by less than I percent a year until the end of the century. More efficient use of ener-

World Bank-IMF Vote Unchanged; PLO Out

WELLINGTON, New Zealand - A special committee of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund decided Friday not to change the voting system that prevented the Palestine Liberation Organization from attending last year's annual joint Bank-IMF meeting.

New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon, chairman of the eight-member committee, said Friday that any decision to accept the PLO as an observer at the meet-ings would have to be made "at the highest political level." He said that it was evident that the PLO would obtain observer status if the two bodies adopted a simple-majority voting system.

1980 U.S. Inflation at 12.4% After 1.1% Rise in December sumer prices rose a seasonally adjusted 1.1 percent in December and finished the year up 12.4 per-cent, the Labor Department said Friday. This was slightly better than the 13.3-percent inflation rate in 1979, but considerably above the Carter administration's early 1980 projection of 10.4 percent.

Last year had the second-worst inflation rate since 1946, when World War II controls were lifted and prices rose 18.2 percent. Inflation was less than 2 percent in the early 1960s but reached 12.2 percent in 1974. In a separate report, the Labor Department said the purchasing power after taxes and inflation of an urban blue-collar worker with a non-working wife and two children declined 0.6 percent in December and fell 4.8 percent in the year, a slight improvement over 1979's 5.3-percent decline. Spendable average weekly earnings in December were $216.01, up from $201.80 a year earlier.

Gasoline Up 18.9%

Home mortgages, energy and food all contributed to the 1.1-percent inflation rate for December, which was slightly above the 1-per-cent rise in each of the previous three months.

In the year as a whole, food and beverage prices rose 10.1 percent, housing 13.7 percent, household fuels 17 percent, transportation 14.7 percent, gasoline 18.9 percent, apparel and its upkeep 6.8 percent, medical care 10 percent and entertainment 9.6 percent. The consumer price index for December stood at 258.4, base 1967. A 1967 dollar is now worth

Food and beverage prices rose 1 percent in December, with meat, poultry, fish and eggs all rising. Housing costs rose 1.3 percent month, due mostly to a 4.1-percent rise in home financing costs as mortgage rates rose. House prices were unchanged in December.

U.S. Automakers Increase Layoffs

United Press Intern DETROIT - Layoffs and production cuts are again on the rise in the U.S. auto industry. Domestic automakers reported Thursday that they have 195,350 bourf workers on indefinite layoff, up from 189,750 last week and the highest level since mid-October. Another 23,250 hourly workers will be on temporary layoff next week, as eight domestic assembly plants are closed to trim invento-ries. General Motors accounts for the largest share of the production cuts planned next week with six plants and 20,900 workers to be idle. Ford and American Motors will suspend production at one plant each.

For the first time, Toyota employees will also be idled. The leading car importer in the United States said that lagging sales of its Japanese-built pickup trucks have forced it to suspend production for two weeks starting Monday at its Long Beach, Calif., plant, idling

Larry Wachtel of Bache Halsey Stuart Shields said that in contrast to a few weeks ago, "the debate on interest rates is if they will go up from here, not down." He also said money managers "want to see something tangible" of the Regan economic package. That package is due sometime in February.

Analysts said the 1.1-percent rise in December consumer prices was no surprise but still not good news. They said it suggests the Federal Reserve will not have the leeway to allow rates to ease yet, particularly with the money supply a WOITY. After the close, the Fed reported that the nation's basic money supply, the MI-A, fell $8.7 billion from the previous week to a seasonally adjusted average of $374.1 billion in the week ending Jan. 14. The Fed said it had revised the previous week's figure upward by $300 million.

The broader money supply, the Mi-B, dropped $2.34 billion to an average of $416.9 billion in the week. The Fed said the previous week's M1-B had been revised upward by $419.2 million.

For the latest four weeks Mi-A averaged $380.2 billion, a 4.2-perdechne itom M1-B averaged $413.4 billion in the four weeks, a 4.0-percent increase in the statistical quarter.

Analysts said the slow trading this week was a clear indication that institutions have retreated to the sidelines until they can get a better picture of where the economy was headed.

Trend-setting Citibank encouraged some traders when it kept its prime lending rate at the prevail-ing 20-percent level. On the trading floor, Texas International Co., which soared 9½ points Thursday, was active at the

After the close the Agriculture Department released a forecast that retail food prices would rise at an annual rate of between 12 and percent in the first quarter. Food prices last year rose 8.6 percent, the smallest increase since 1977, primarily due to a relatively small rise in retail meat prices, the department said.

The dollar climbed to a record 962.50 lire in late Milan trading, up from 957.25 Thursday and 958.30 a week ago.

In Frankfurt, where the dollar also rose sharply to 2.0265 Deutsche marks, dealers attributed the gain to high interest rates, both in the United States and on dollars held overseas.

Gold took a beating in Zurich where its closing price of $549.50 a troy ounce was its lowest since the end of May and was down $15 from Thursday.

India Tenders Offer for Crude On Spot Market

NEW DELHI — India has tendered to buy 35,700 barrels of spot crude oil for end-of-February shipment, Petroleum Ministry sources have disclosed.

The purchase is being made to meet delays in receiving crode from some oil producers with which India has signed contracts and to help avert any disruption to Indian refineries using imported crude. The sources said India may make further spot purchases be-cause it has not fully accounted for targeted 1981 imports.
India meets about two-thirds of its oil requirements by overseas purchases and plans to import almost 2.3 million barrels of crude and over 900,000 barrels of oil products this year.

Negotiations with Libya have been completed and India will buy this year which will be processed in a third country.

PARIS - Westinghouse Electric and Franco-Americaine de Constructions Atomiques (Framatome) agreed Friday to end a nuclear reactor licencing accord a year ahead of schedule and to sign a new technical cooperation agreement giving the French firm free-dom of action.

The decision follows a "consultation" agreement signed in Washington on Thursday by the French ambassador and the State Department. Under the new arrangement, still to be approved by the U.S. Department of Energy, Frama-tome will no longer need to seek authorization from Westinghouse

Westing house and Framatone will be those of "equal partners," giving the French firm "complete freedom in the political, industrial and commercial fields," the French Indus-

The story is replete with tragic irony. The French paratroopers "won" the Battle of Algiers, uprooting by house-to-house search, ending the plastic bombings of street cafes, but at the unacceptable price — for the French public at home at least — of secret military torture. The French press rose to the occa-sion. The "pacification" of the countryside also appeared to succeed militarily, but at a political cost of sending a quarter-million draftees to North Africa and thereby threatening every French family, once again, with a youth "mort pour la Patrie."

Calif. - It cost about $3,000 in court expenses to try a Vietnamese refugee and his son on charges of stealing a five-cent washer and brandishing a weapon, officials estimate. The Alameda County district attorney's office had said it did not want to prosecute the case against Thang Ngan Ngo and his son, Truong. But Judge Roy Pucci said the law left them no choice.

Trial of Vietnamese in 5-Cent Theft

A jury, aided by a Vietnamese translator, this week found both men not guilty of petty theft charges involving a five-cent washer taken from a shopping center in this city south of Oakland.

The son was found guilty of brandishing a weapon at security guards. The teen-ager said he grabbed a monkey wrench and tire iron to protect his father, who he thought was endangered by security guards approaching the man about the washer.

The father said he had been examining the washers from an open bag and unthinkingly walked out the store with one in his hand.

By 1954, these European colons, most of whom were French, numbered about 1 million and lived alongside a rapidly growing Moslem Algerian population of at least 9 million. The two popula-tions had coexisted in separate economic, social, religious and cultural systems since the 1870s when the Europeans first began to arrive in large numbers. After 1930 the Algerians began to leave the countryside in a mass exodus so that by 1950 the four major cities — Algiers, Oran, Constantine, Bone — had been transformed from predominantly European into Moslem cities. Yet apart from residential mixing in the cities, contact between the two cultures was al-most nonexistent. Neither school, many said fraudulently — but nor army, nor any political or so-nonetheless successfully made the nor army, nor any political or so-cial institution served to bring the two peoples together. Guy became Oakland's third quarterback after Dan Pastorini broke his leg in the fifth game this season. He attends quarterback meetings and works in defensive drills, playing the role of the oppo-sition quarterback. "It has made practice easier," he said. "It's not as long as it used to be. International Herald Tribune WENGEN, Switzerland - Behind all the electronics and other sophistications of space-age ski racing, there is always a feeling of the old days in Wengen, where everybody connected with the World Cup assembles once a year for the classic Lauberhorn races.

"In the first place, you still have to come up here by train," said Charly Kahr, head of the Austrian ski team. "It's the tradition that makes this place so special." Indeed, the only cars or trucks allowed into this Alpine village are those officially sanctioned for deliveries or emergencies. Wooden sleds abound, as do electrically powered carts that serve as taxis from train station to hotel.

Founded in 1930, when modern ski racing was only beginning to develop, the Lauberhorn downhill has become a shrine in the sport. Covering more than two miles, the course is the longest of the World Cup pistes; while not the most dangerous, its sharp turns and drops make it one of the most dif-

In 1954, Christian Pravda of Austria set a course record of three minutes, 23.2 seconds, A number of racers have chipped away at that mark over the years, and last year Peter Mueller of Switzerland finished in a record time of 2:30.56.

Times, literally, have changed. But the appeal and excitement of the race remain, and as skiers prepare for Saturday's downhill and Sunday's slalom, the talk of the town is centered on Steve Podborski, the 23-year-old Canadian who is coming off three straight victories.

A triumph here not only would enshrine his name, but would also make him the first skier to win four straight cup downhills since 1977, when Franz Klammer of Austria was routinely trustrating everybody.

Duel on the Slopes What makes the 1981 Lau-

That he did, and as a consequence he had to duck out the back door after a press conference in Kitzbuehel to avoid a mob of autograph seekers. The telephone calls from Canada have increased to the point that he is now having them screened. And Thursday he had to take time out between training runs for an interview with CBS television.

"It's obvious that people are watching me more than before," he said. "Of course there is pressure, but I always have been able to deflect it. Nobody can affect my skiing but myself, and it's important that I remember that."

As a veteran on the cup circuit, Podborski knows the Lauberborn as well as anybody.

"When you push out of the start it's very flat, so you get three good pushes and then go into about a 15-second tuck." he said without stopping to think about it. "Then there's a hard right turn, and then a left over a few bumpy rollers onto a flat that gets steeper and steeper so that you're going at about 80 miles an hour.

There is a fast left and then a very, very hard right that slows you to about 15 miles an hour. Then you come into the first spectacular section of the course, called the Hundschopf. It's between two rocks, and there are nets every-

NEW ORLEANS — The New Orleans Saints hired Burn Phillips as their new head coach Thursday, East German officials deny the college is the "factory of champi-ons" Westerners have made of it; the eighth coach in the team's 14season National Football League history. The Saints did not disclose few sports stars train or study there, they say. Phillips said his first job would be assessing the talent he inherits from Dick Nolan, who was fired with four games to go in the 1980 season. He said he thinks the Saints have better talent than the Oilers had when he took over at Honston six years ago.
He said he had not analyzed college football talent for this spring's draft but said he would not rule out trading draft choices for established veterans. Phillips also refused to preclude trades involving veteran Saint players.

Phillips' hiring had been widely rumored for weeks. Team owner John Mecom said the Phillips. 57. became his leading candidate when he was fired by late last year the Houston Oilers. "We've kept Bowl programs.

But two-thirds of youths under 18 take part in sports outside school organized by Free German Youth, trade unions or other Communist organizations.

These are the chief talent-spotting centers for special sports schools run by the East German Sports and Gymnastics Association (DTSB). Two or three thousand children enter these special schools each year, many spotted in nationwide competitions.

Head Start

DTSB spokesman Martin Kramer said 90 percent of East Germany's medal winners at the Lake Placid and Moscow Olympics last year got their start this way. "You should look for the causes of our Olympic success in the purposeful development of child and youth sport," he said.

Strict training methods were part of the secret of East Germany's success, for example, in women's swimming, Kramer said. "The trainers quite simply pushed the women harder." he said. "They pushed into new areas. Now it is done all over the world and we haven't got the same edge."

He and other Communist officials sneered at suggestions the masculine-looking East German women swimmers scored part of their success through swallowing hormones and body-building ballet recalled a festival where she was set to perform. "We were in a changing room and a man came in," she said. "We told him he had strange ideas. The achievements of no business here - and it was Gudrun Wegener. . . Just like a man, the voice, everything."

The girl also told of a friend who left a special sports school because she refused to drink juices she believed contained body-building drugs. Since then the friend had complained of feeling unwell, but doctors found it hard to believe her because she looked so robustly fit and they were not acquainted with drugs developed by sports doctors, many of them schooled at the Leipzig Institute of Sports Medicine adjacent to the college.

Kramer said a typical day for an 8-year-old swimmer begins at 7 a.m. Two hours' training are fol-lowed by three hours of regular school, an hour for lunch, two or three hours' afternoon training and supervised homework in the

'Strange Ideas'

East Germans talk of the youngsters' enthusiasm for sports. But many. Westerners — and some East Germans — question the wisdom of removing children from their families and entrusting them to teachers trained in Leipzig to produce Socialist sportsmen.

"We encourage competitive sport because it corresponds to our goals." Kramer said. He said East Germany wants to show it offers citizens the best chance to develop individual talents; he said successin sport boosts national pride and makes East Germany better known abroad

"In Canada [at the 1975 Mon-

a Cornelia Ender contributed a little to people getting to know East Germany

Since top sports stars are so much in the Western limelight, East Germans try to ensure they remain loval Communists. A textbook at the Leipzig college states the first goal of athletics training is to "develop the traits of a Socialist sportsman." Apart from training, which includes the regular military practice common to all East German colleges, the chief item on the curriculum is "Funda-mentals of Marxism-Leninism." Dr. Fritz Jahn of the Leipzig college said it is necessary to make sure traveling sports stars and trainers reject the "various threats, blackmail and tempting offers" Westerners use to lure them to defect.

But some competitors apparently never make it to the west. One former wrestler said a contemporary who won several innior cham ionships and clearly outclassed pionships and clearly outclassed his group never was allowed on trips to the west because he had relatives in West Germany.

Ingenuity

Shortage of funds, which brings the crowded training halls that East German sports officials list as a major problem, has been overcome in many cases by ingenuity.

In one Leipzig laboratory a professor proudly showed expensive Japanese and other Western machines used in biomechanics, but also displayed equipment improvised to save the cost of more imported technology.

The stadium opposite the school - the country's biggest - was built with the same resourceful-ness. Officials said local citizens helped pile giant heaps of rubble left from World War II bombing into the banks of a 100,000-seat Shortage of facilities means it will be some time - Kramer said the year 2000 - before the Olympics are held in East Germany, Meanwhile the Leipzig school and others throughout East Germany will keep turning out Olympic

Don't Ask Why, Sell!

WASHINGTON — Several weeks ago, the stock market went into a panic when a man in Florida, who runs a private service for investors, called up 3,000 of his clients and told them to sell all their stock. The next morning, Wall Street was in a panic and everyone was selling. Apparently, thousands of sane, educated people, who han-dle billions of dollars of investments, got caught up in the selling fever at the same time.

If one man 墨二月 could affect the stock market Buchwald with a telephone call, what about the other markets particularly the real estate market, which everyone says is overinflated?

I have this nightmare that early one morning I am going to get a phone call from my real estate broker, Longworth, who says, "Sell your house right away. The price is going to tumble."

"But you told me two days ago it was going to go up!" "Don't ask questions. I've been studying the classified ads and it's time to bail out."

I wake up my wife and say, "We have to sell the house." "When?" she wants to know.

"Right now. I just got a call from Longworth and he says we have to sell immediately, or we'll lose our shirts. I'll go down into the basement and make a For Sale' sign. You clean up the house and repaint the kitchen." "At four o'clock in the morn-

We have to move fast before other people in the neighborhood are tipped off."

I put on my bathrobe, and go down to the cellar and nail a piece of plywood onto a stake, and paint "For Sale" in large black letters.

My wife is on the ladder, painting the ceiling. "Hurry up," I tell her, "before it's too late." "Where are we going to live if

"Don't ask stupid questions. We've got to get rid of this place

At five o'clock in the morning I'm driving the "For Sale" sign into the ground. My neighbor Ewing hears me and comes out in his bathrobe.

"What the hell are you doing?" I say, "I'm only telling you this because I'm your friend. The real estate market is going to collapse as soon as the market opens this morning. I got it on the hot line from my broker, and he hasn't been wrong since I subscribed to his service."

Ewing says, "Thanks for telling me," and rushes back into his house to make a "For Sale" sign. Apparently, he tells Sullivan, who lives next door, and Sullivan is soon out nailing a "For Sale" sign on his door.

Word sweeps like a brushfire through the neighborhood. The Tower Apartments, the Westchester and the Colonnade also put up "For Sale" signs, and by the time the real estate markets open in the morning, everyone is standing in front of his house or apartment building, waiting to sell. As each hour passes, every homeowner keeps lowering his price. Houses that people wouldn't have sold for $200,000 are now going for $125,000. Then they drop to $90,000, $80,000, $70,000. But there are still no takers. Guggenheim, in desperation, offers to sell me his house for $50,000, completely furnished, but I offer to sell him mine for $40,000, and he says he'll take it.

In my nightmare I move into a Holiday Inn and get a call from Longworth, who says, "Well, was I right or was I wrong?"

"You couldn't have been more right. I've never seen the real estate market in this town take a nose dive like this. I managed to sell out at $40,000."

"The reason I'm calling," Longworth says, "is that I've just been studying the new indicators, and it's now time to buy real estate

I wake up my wife. "Get dressed. We have to go over and see Guggenheim about buying back our house." "For how much?"

"If he subscribes to Longworth's service, we'll be lucky if he gives it to us for $200,000."

Leaves From the British Library

A Few Pages on Its Table of Contents — and Malcontents

International Herald Tribus ONDON - The British Li-L brary has existed officially only since 1973 when it became independent of the British Museum in which it is in part housed. But in fact the library is as old as the British Museum, which was founded in 1753; its nucleus is Sir Hans Sloane's library, purchased from the proceeds of a national lottery. The first of the library's several Reading Rooms was cold and dark and narrow and attracted only five or six readers a day, leading the first Keeper, a physician, to resign because of ill health and boredom. Partly because of his complaints, a new Reading Room opened, with the poet Thomas Gray as one of its first users. The philosopher Hume, the jurist Blackstone, Burke, Gibbon and John Wilkes followed. Dr. Johnson had a reader's ticket but there is no evidence that he ever used it. The Museum Flea

With more readers, the Reading Room changed and expanded to be used by Macauley, Dickens, Thackeray, Browning, Scott, Ruskin, Matthew Arnold, Meredith, Lamb and Peter Roget of Thesaurus fame. But none of the rooms was sufficient: poor ventilation caused an ailment known as Museum Headache and there was also the notorious breed of Museum flea - "larger," said one reader, "than any to be found except in the receiving rooms of workhouses.

From early on, the Reading Room attracted a fair number of eccentrics: "I believe there are several people in a state of imbecility who come to read in the British Museum," said Carlyle, who founded the private London Library in 1841 because Lord Macauley got better treatment than he at the British Museum. And then as now there were people who simply came to the Reading Room to read, for decades. A woman who bicycled in daily from North London died recently in her 90s. She had been since the age of 19.

Karl Marx is the Reading Room's best-known regular. He got his reader's pass in 1850

coming to the Reading Rooms

when he was living in poverty in Soho and earning small sums from an ancestor of this newspaper, the New York Tribune. It is assumed that he wrote "Das Kapital" in the Reading Room, occupying a seat somewhere between rows K and P, which were adjacent to the historical reference works he used. Marx used not only an old Reading Room but the present, splendidly domed and circular Reading Room, the creation of another political refugee, Antonio Panizzi, a lawyer from Modena who became Keeper of the Department of Printed Books, started a cataloging system, secured strict enforcement of the copyright law and won the library a higher annual grant from Parliament. The present Reading Room, inaugurated with champague served from the inquiry desk, is his greatest achievement: its pale blue and gold dome supported by 20 iron piers, its walls encircled by part of the 110 miles of shelving the library currently

The Reading Room has 425 seats (would-be ticket holders must supply scholarly credentials and references) placed at long ta-bles that radiate like spokes from the central inquiry desk where 2,000 volumes of catalogs are shelved. (Books printed since 1975 are cataloged on micro-fiches). Each reader's desk has a hook for hanging a pen and used to have a small sponge below it to catch dripping ink. Places are not reserved but the newcomer feels uneasy about taking someone's seat and desperate if he interrupts the silence with a sneeze.

The quiet is indeed almost palpable. The BBC has a sound effect labelled British Museum Reading Room: It is dead si-Unlike the dread Bibliotheque

Nationale in Paris the Reading Room is a welcoming and efficient place. But there are signs of the times — readers sometimes tear leaves out of books, most often Burke's Peerage, and there are now scholarly looking plainclothesmen wandering about to make sure that no one defaces, steals, spatters ink, eats or chews gum. After a debate it has been decided that coughdrops will be

If the Reading Room is the most famous part of the library, the library itself is an enormous institution including manuscript, newspaper, music, map science and official publications libraries. Publishers in the United Kingdom must deposit one copy of every book, periodical or newspaper in the British Library; foreign material is obtained by purchase or exchange.

10 Million Books

The total number of books in the Reference Division is nearly 10 million and the library's sections are spread from Yorkshire to 17 locations in London. Long debated in Parliament, the library's functions were centralized when the British Library was created in 1973; the next step is to put as much of its collection as possible under one

Once again this winter the government announced that building of the new British Library would soon begin: it is a story everyone has heard before. The new site is on the Euston Road, about 15 minutes from the British Museum at a rapid jog, and the first stage of the building was estimat-ed to cost £79 million (about $190 million) at 1979 prices. The cotire building project is expected to last as long as this decade and to cost between £250 and £300 million at 1979 rates.

The loss to the British Museum will be considerable: such manuscripts as Magna Cartat the Lindesfarne Gospels and Shakespeare's mortgage will move with the library, nor will there be any more of the superb temporary exhibitions the library puts on in the British Museum. The present exhibition, celebrating the centenary of George Eliot's death, is a stunning example: limited to 92 items and confined to one very small room, it is illuminating provocative and touching, with George Eliot's usually rather gloomy and equine features softened in pastel portraits showing her light brown hair, blue eyes and fair skin.

Uncertain Fate

The fate of the Reading Room after the British Library pulls out is uncertain: the museum will not be allowed to change it; nor will its atmosphere be the same if. as is supposed, it is reserved only for museum staff and scholars.

"Won't you miss this room?" an efficient young librarian was asked as she led the way through a false wall (panelled in books of course) from the Reading Room to the stacks. "Yes, of course," she said. But a move is incvitable: the library grows at a rate of 14 miles of books a year. If sheer size and the need for practicality have put the library and the museum asunder, the spirit that drew them together was greater still. As Virginia Woolf wrote in "Jacob's Room" (Jacob works quite a lot in the Reading Room), "There is in the British Museum an enormous mind Consider that Plato is there cheek by jowl with Aristotle, and Shakespeare with Marlowe. This mind is hoarded beyoud the power of any single-mind to possess it. Nevertheless ... one can't help thinking how one might come with a notebook, sit at a desk, and read it all Abourezk said that "Rita's been getting a burn rap. She stood by him during the worst crisis of his life, and now she looks like the bad person." Aboutezk said the reason Mrs. Jenrette wrote "The Diary Of A Mad Congresswife" for the Washington Post and posed for "those pictures" in Playboy, reportedly in see-through negligees.
